These Foolish Things Remind Us of Us Edition

*Austin, day 6 of Fool month, 2016. alllll day on the 1st, off and on, we were on the hunt for fun, tearing up and down the internet readyreadyready to be entertained. huh. fun and funny can be hard to find even on allfoolsday ...maybe we suffer some kind of genetic deficiency :) *oh the terrible seriousness of it all* but whoopie cushions and fake doodoo are still only half funny and still in great supply...and do you notice the whole culture of funny seems to have shifted more in the direction of "adult" humor? ok, well, sex is probably only a 6000 yr classic point of interest for poking fun *smirkwink* and it's sorta funnier and funnier the older we get. whatever. we were all brought up "nice"...often laughing when our friends laughed, funny or not :) and we still do it...LOL. but when your tickle box turns over inside and you can't help yourself. *snortsnort* it's just the best feeling. and it's catching...when a baby giggles everybody gets the giggles. but we have found something really foolcool in the last few years...self-humor *oh my* and we have jk rowling to thank for that as much as anybody else. especially we speak of the boggart-banishing spell: "Riddikulus!" [you hafta go click on that and watch the scene from Harry Potter or you're not gonna understand the rest of this, you preshuss dinos] ...true confession: we did indeed hie to B&N at midnight to buy book II with all of the OTHER 8-10 year olds. we loved it and do not shrink one smidge from our wildchildways. but now, hear the tale of yesterday's boggart [a special demon in Harry Potter, def: the thing you fear the most]. several weeks ago we were oh-so-charming with a veryverybizzy person at AISD and talked them into doing this thing...which was actually a big deal. but for some reason *we slept?* we forgot and friday morning (being the silly april fool) we cheerfully called up this same bizzypants person and started asking for this same big deal special thing alllll over again. *aaaaack. our worst nightmare**

and the second we realized why the other end of the phone was now bizzy AND *puzzled, prestochango! our clever badinage whooshes out the window like a farting balloon and up pops the most hated spectre of the silverhaired social planet—the boggart of embarrassment. caught practically nekkid. nowhere to run for cover. BUT. with a lurching heart and not missing more than halfabeat ,we pulled out our little inner magic wand and put rollerskates on that hairy8-leggedseniormomentsucker and laughed '*oh gosh we talked about this weeks ago didn't we? yikes! okayokay so i owe you a box of donuts!* ha. *turns out, even bizzywigs are charmed and disarmed by stupid honesty and a free box of donuts ... riddikulus! man, we've got this down and brown four ways to Sunday. smackdab down.*

Internetty offerings of things for fools:

Samsung introduces Smart Pants Fridge Lock: If the tension around your waist gets too high, the embedded ARTIK chip module will send signals to your refrigerator to prevent you from overeating. The fridge door lock can then only be deactivated with consent from a designated person such as your mother or significant other. Click HERE for more info and (gasp) more trouser browser options.

Why 4 FEET 8.5 Inches is Very Important.

Railroad Tracks

The U.S. Standard railroad gauge (distance between the rails) is 4 feet, 8.5 inches. That's an exceedingly odd number.

Why was that gauge used? Because that's the way they built them in England, and English expatriates designed the U.S. Railroads.

Why did the English build them like that? Because the first rail lines were built by the same people who built the pre-railroad tramways, and that's the gauge they used.

Why did 'they' use that gauge then? Because the people who built the tramways used the same jigs and tools that they had used for building wagons, which used that wheel spacing.

Why did the wagons have that particular Odd wheel spacing?

Well, if they tried to use any other spacing, the wagon wheels would break on some of the old, long distance roads in England, because that's the spacing of the wheel ruts.

So, who built those old rutted roads? Imperial Rome built the first long distance roads in Europe (including England) for their legions. Those roads have been used ever since.

And the ruts in the roads? Roman war chariots formed the initial ruts, which everyone else had to match for fear of destroying their wagon wheels. Since the chariots were made for Imperial Rome, they were all alike in the matter of wheel spacing.

Therefore, the United States standard railroad gauge of 4 feet, 8.5 inches is derived from the original specifications for an Imperial Roman war chariot. In other words, bureaucracies live forever.

So the next time you are handed a specification, procedure, or process, and wonder, 'What horse's ass came up with this?', you may be exactly right. Imperial Roman army chariots were made just wide enough to accommodate the rear ends of two war horses.

Now, the twist to the story:

When you see a Space Shuttle sitting on its launch pad, you will notice that there are two big booster rockets attached to the sides of the main fuel tank. These are solid rocket boosters, or SRBs. The SRBs are made by Thiokol at their factory in Utah.

The engineers who designed the SRBs would have preferred to make them a bit larger, but the SRBs had to be shipped by train from the factory to the launch site. The railroad line from the factory happens to run through a tunnel in the mountains and the SRBs had to fit through that tunnel. The tunnel is slightly wider than the railroad track, and the railroad track, as you now know, is about as wide as two horses' behinds.

So, a major Space Shuttle design feature of what is arguably the world's most advanced transportation system was determined over two thousand years ago by the width of a horse's ass. And you thought being a horse's ass wasn't important!

Now you know, horses' asses control almost everything. 'Explains a whole lot, doesn't it?

HEH. Even though mostly fact, come to find out, the 'splaination is alllllll pretty much April foolin' but it's pretty good.
